Letter from Our Executive Director

To me Spring has always represented growth, change, and new beginnings. At Mutual Ground we are constantly growing and changing, but this year has been a special one. It is special for many reasons, least of which is the pandemic we are all living through. While the pandemic has made growth and change slower and more complicated than normal, it has also opened our eyes to an issue that has always been present, but has not been given proper attention. That issue is racism.

At Mutual Ground, we have taken this year to begin a journey toward becoming an anti-racist organization. This means that we have reached out to experts, implemented a whole agency assessment, and now begin the real work of changing our culture to learn and address racial disparities within our organization for both clients and staff. Our Board of Directors and leadership team are committed to this process that will result in many changes throughout our organization over time.

Another significant and exciting change we are still moving through is merging Breaking Free’s outpatient addiction treatment and prevention services under the Mutual Ground umbrella. This was a huge undertaking in normal circumstances, but in the midst of a pandemic, a merger was - and still is - more complicated. We have overcome many obstacles and are now in the very beginning stages of using Mutual Ground’s expertise in program development, public awareness and education, and service excellence to break down the stigma of addiction. We bring a trauma informed lens to the issue of substance use and bridge the silos that are often present for individuals and families facing complex issues when reaching out for help in the world of social services.

Thank you for helping us lift the voices of individuals and families who are victims of violence, and those who struggle with the disease of addiction - we know these issues are happening throughout our community and that the pandemic has only intensified these issues. We strive to break down the barriers for clients to receive help and continue to be the beacon of hope that our community has come to rely on over the last 46 years.

Sincerely,
Michelle Meyer
Executive Director

Is sexual assault still a problem in 2021?

As April approaches so does the reminder of sexual assault awareness. For all involved in supporting victims on a daily basis, we are very aware of the causes, the repercussions, and the trauma involved when sexual violence takes place. Sexual assault is a vast issue that impacts all people whether it is obvious or not. This awareness is very different from what others not involved in sexual violence prevention perceive. It is this disconnect from what victims and their supporters understand and what the general public perceives that reinforces an indifference among the population. A daunting reminder of this is how 1 in 5 women, 1 in 21 men, 1 in 4 girls, and 1 in 6 boys experience rape, or how 90% of sexual assaults that take place on college campuses are not reported. Looking at those statistics you would imagine that we as a society would harbor greater urgency towards a resolution or prevention yet these experiences and statistics lay in the background not phishing the public until they are individually impacted by the effects.

A Personal Perception of SA

as an Advocate and an Individual

This fact stays in the back of my head while I walk through my college campus, when I go on long distance runs alone, when I pick a parking spot in a crowded area, and when I stand on the corner and think about how her school treats boys and girls differently. I also think about what my position is within this divergence of attitudes towards sexual assault and what my actions are within the environment of Mutual Ground. Then outside of my life, to be conscious of the signs of sexual violence and understand how vast trauma can be and how it presents itself through various victims. To acknowledge that I, a single individual, cannot prevent every potential assault from happening or prevent every victim. One of the facts is that it is difficult to grasp with 1 in 5 women and 1 in 21 men suffering. It cannot be a dent made in those numbers of people victimized unless there is broadened social change.

A Solution to Draw From

Some productive methods to altering this predicament may be to employ positive attitudes toward those around us through symbolic interactionism in order to broaden the understanding of how to be a part of a supportive system and how to understand what sexual violence looks like: Many victims become isolated and feel they do not have support in their personal life, these victims are held to the expectation that they will have to get over this traumatic experience and re-assimilate eventually. This expectation puts the pressure on the victim and reduces accountability everywhere. Autonomy and a respect for individuals as their own persons is a lesson everyone of all ages should be aware of. Creating an environment where respect of personal space and physical touch can alleviate the anxiety some victims may feel while simultaneously creating a norm for boundaries that others can learn from. Aside from respecting physical boundaries, sometimes support and the victims are people that publicly can be silencing rather than encouraging. When you speak not only to known victims but all people, you want them to feel comfortable to confiding in you. You do not want the plethora of doubts and judgments that may come to mind, instead understand that they are not telling you a story to receive scrutiny; rather this is vulnerability that should be met with an understanding of the gravity of their situation.

Not all victims will or are capable of describing details in an objective manner but she should also be aware of what is a situation that comes with great emotion. For the month of April and the months beyond that, consider the ways you may become part of a supportive system and collectively we may create more empathetic and encouraging environments for all.

Ways to Create Trust and Support

for Those Affected by Sexual Violence

- Respect boundaries both physically and emotionally
- Speak about the situation only when they are comfortable doing so
- Emphasize that you are a person to confide in
- Look to resources they may need but are not aware of
- Maintain a neutral position when hearing their story as this is not the time for doubts to be voiced
- Normalize believing survivors and recognizing how their lives may be impacted (this may also extend to their loved ones)
- Recognize the groups most likely to be victimized and why they may need specific resources

April is Sexual Assault Awareness Month

April 2021 marks the official 20th anniversary of Sexual Assault Awareness Month, a time to draw attention to the prevalence of sexual assault and educate individuals and communities about how to prevent it. Sexual harassment, assault, and abuse can happen to anyone, anywhere, in any community — including in online spaces.

As Mutual Ground, we understand that sexual assault, abuse, and sexual harassment are problems that we face in our community. We listen to sexual violence survivors…we believe them…we support them throughout their journey.

Throughout the last fiscal year, Mutual Ground Sexual Assault Disclosure Department worked endlessly to support victims of sexual violence throughout their journey. Our advocates supported victims during their time of need responding to 93 sexual violence hospital calls. Our counseling services provided 104 sexual assault victims with 1,006 hours of individual counseling and 44 hours of group counseling. In addition to survivors, 20 significant hours of counseling. Our Sexual Violence Hotline answered 593 sexual assault crisis calls. Our court advocates assisted survivors with legal procedures. And all these services are offered free of charge.

If you or someone you love is a victim of sexual violence, we are here to help.

Tips to Show Support for Survivors of Sexual Assault

According to RAINN (Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network), every 73 seconds, an American is Sexually Assaulted. When a friend or family member tells you that they have been sexually assaulted, it can be difficult to know what to say to them. We encourage you to be a supportive and non-judgmental as possible since it can be very difficult for a survivor to disclose to someone they care about. Here are a few phrases that can help you show support through a survivor’s healing process:

“I believe you.”
“Implicit in a lot of courage to tell me about this.”
“It’s not your fault.”
“You didn’t do anything to deserve this.”
“You are not alone.”
“I care about you and am here to listen or help in any way I can.”
“I’m sorry this happened.”
“This shouldn’t have happened to you.”

Why Be a Volunteer?

It’s not for money. It’s not for fame. And it’s not for any personal gain. It’s just for love of fellow man. It’s just lending a helping hand. It’s just giving a tithe of self.

That’s something that you can’t buy with wealth.
It’s not the medals worn with pride.
It’s just for the feeling deep inside.

It’s that reward down deep in your heart.
It’s that feeling that you have been a part of.

That’s what makes you a volunteer.
